Caught between two worlds

The Rural Commute

Now that I moved off property, I make the rural one hour and 15 minute drive to the sanctuary daily. But this day was different. I can't explain why.

On the rural county roads, there are days of beauty....slowing down to see the bald eagles feeding on a carcass or deer frolicking in the farm fields.

But, at the same time, it's sad to realize I see more wildlife living free on my way to work than I ever will at our sanctuary.

As I drove to work this day, the frost covered the ground. You could see the tracks of the few locals who drove the desolate road before me that morning.

A Wild Bobcat Lesson

I drove along noticing the white covered road. In front of me was an animal hit who'd already passed away. Sadly, this isn't something new for any of us who drive cars. But today, something made me stop and get out.

As I approached the animal, I quickly saw that it was a wild bobcat. My heart sank. I'd only seen wild bobcats a few times ever in my life. One was out patrolling the ditches on a rural road at dusk, I assume looking for dinner.

Another was a young adolescent crossing the road. True to their natural instincts, as soon as I stopped to take a look, he took off into the woods.

Sadly, the third was a wild born kitten, wandering on his own, too weak to survive the cold winter. And now today.

Seeing this bobcat passed away on the county road really affected me. It still does today. Tears flow down my face replaying that morning.

As I approached the bobcat, it was evident by his injuries that he'd died immediately. No animal could've survived that trauma. But his body didn't have any of the frosty snow that was on the road and his body had already melted the frosty ground. I assume he was hit just shortly before I arrived.

I couldn't leave him there to be run over by every car and truck that passed by. I grabbed a

Autumn, bobcat

Autumn and Francis, bobcat

blanket from my car and picked up his broken body so that he could return to the wild by being buried in the woods.

I remember the feel of him in my arms, even though he was gone, I told him everything would be okay. I wrapped him tightly in the blanket to support his broken bones and covered his head out of respect.

Loss of Freedom

So why do I tell you this story? I suppose because it took me a long time to figure out why the tears wouldn't stop, why it devastated me so much.

I'm sure, on some level, it may be because I have personal relationships with rescued captive bobcats. So, it felt familiar.

But I believe it was deeper than that. I hadn't had this feeling since my trip to Africa, where I got to see lions strolling the savannah as they were meant to do.

I think it deeply affected me because I was grieving a loss. A loss of freedom every resident we take in endures. And coming face-to-face with a wild bobcat who lost his life just brought it to the surface again.

Those That Can Never Be Free

So I, alongside all of you, spend my life rescuing cats who can never be free. And I accept that.

It wasn't my personal doing, but it was the collective human race. I have a deep connection to animals in the wild. Even though our time is spent on those where the wild has been taken away.

I think that's why the emotional healing of our animals is just as important to me as the physical. I can't physically give them the wild, though we give them large, free-roaming habitats.

But, if with your help I can make them feel wild at heart, I feel I've given them back a piece of their soul.

Our tag line says it all: "Sadly, they will never know freedom, but with your help they do know compassion."

The cats we rescue are caught between two worlds. They are wild animals who live in captivity for a variety of reasons.

Just like our sanctuary is caught between two worlds:

We don't conserve wildlife, but we do provide a home when they aren't releasable.

We don't rescue companion animals, though we rescue wild cats bred to be pets.

We aren't a companion animal shelter, but shelters do place unadoptable hybrid cats with us.

We aren't a zoo, though we do take in retired zoo animals.

We don't necessarily 'check the box' for some funding, yet we're a safety net to those animals many would fund otherwise.

Being caught between two worlds can make it a challenge securing corporate, grant or government funding. We don't 'check the box,' though we do extremely important work.

We provide compassionate care for those who've been stripped of the wild...until one day they move on to their final wild life.

That's why YOU are so important. You support us BECAUSE we help those caught between two worlds.

And for that, I am forever humbled and grateful.

Working Together

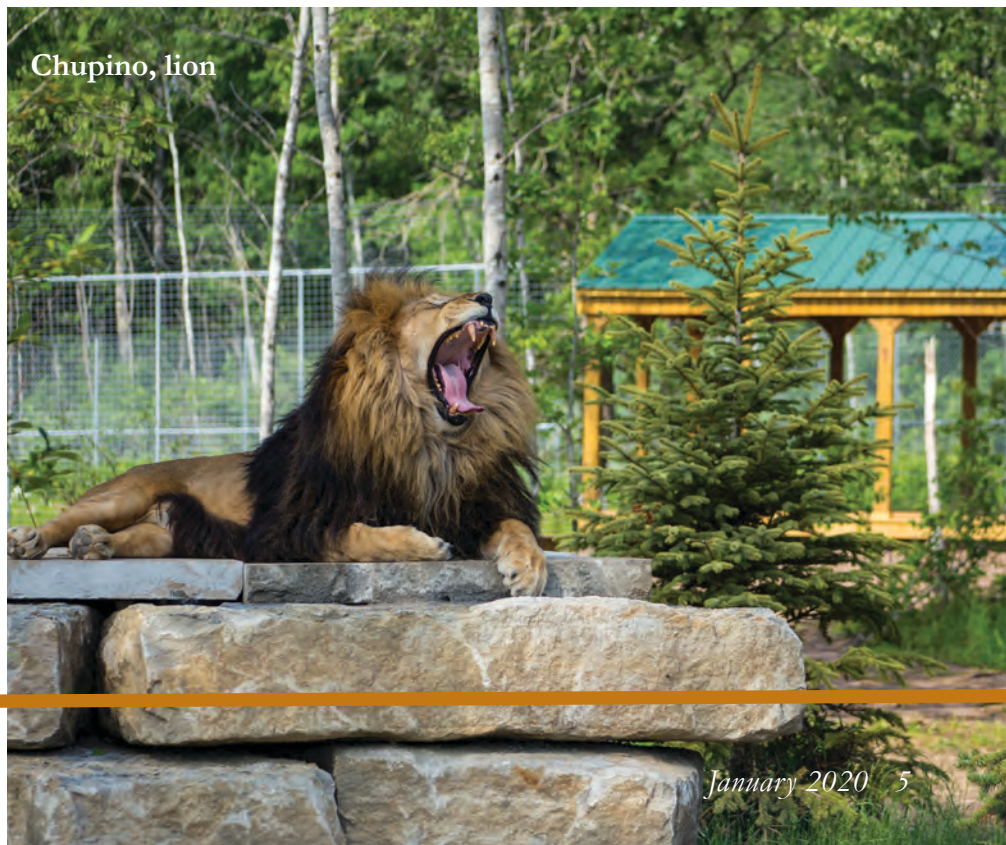

Looking back over the year, it's amazing what our donors and supporters accomplished for so many. In 2019, we celebrated our 20th Anniversary of saving lives!

Residents

- 5 servals and 7 hybrids were welcomed to the Sanctuary.
- The sanctuary completed an international rescue of 13 servals from Canada, finding homes for them at 3 accredited sanctuaries.
- The Wildcat Sanctuary also participated in three ongoing legal cases in hopes the big cats will one day call The Wildcat Sanctuary or an accredited sanctuary home.
- The Wildcat Sanctuary participated in our first ever black bear rescue transporting two 20-year-old bears to their new home at a native wildlife facility.

Habitats

- The last habitat in Wildcat Pines was completed for bobcat Morgan; including skywalks, caves, trees and an indoor, temperature-controlled bedroom.
- Pride Prairie habitat enhancements were completed; including two new caves, two cabanas and lounging platforms for the lions. The largest habitat was split into two areas to help with future mergers of lions.
- Lion Gino's habitat was modified for his neurological needs; including providing two smaller yards as he prefers, opening up his indoor bedrooms for larger space, painting his walls a calming blue, and providing an outdoor, insulated building for him, too.
- Lions Kimba and Sofi received a large outdoor shift yard and larger openings to their three indoor bedrooms for their comfort.
- The '5 Wild' cougar family and the Tiger Trio each received brand new caves to climb on and lounge underneath for shade.

- The '4 Wild' cougar family received double the habitat space, skywalk systems, new platforms and toys to encourage them to be a little braver.
- Floor skirting was reinstalled in seven habitats, per our maintenance protocol, to prevent erosion or digging.
- Multiple Hybrid Haven habitats received new platforms and jungle gyms, giving the cats new places to explore and play.
- Several habitats were modified for future big cats; including enlarging the guillotine doors to their indoor, temperature-controlled building and shifts yards, adding larger shift yards, and upgrading platforms to accommodate future rescues.

Animal Care & Education Center

- The first phase was completed in quarantine. This entailed tear down, excavation, placing drain tile, and rebuilding three outdoor habitats complete with sanitary shift yards and soft substrate. This renovation provides better drainage and flexibility for new residents, as well as geriatric cats who need specialized care.
- Site and architecture plans were finalized for the new Animal Care & Education Center building.

Cat News

- Tiger Tonka moved into the Quarantine area of the sanctuary for the winter. Tiger Mohan and Lioness Shanti Deva will also move there, if the snow/ice becomes a challenge for them.
- Morgan moved into Wildcat Pines.
- Servals Scarlet, Little Diva and Jaharah were merged together.
- Lion siblings Leo and Mansa were successfully reunited and are happily living together.

Morgan, , bobcat

Leo, lion

Hospital and Vet Care

- Intake exams took place on all new residents, in addition to wellness exams on current residents.
- Lion Gino received diagnostic CT scan for his neurological condition.
- Sadly, The Wildcat Sanctuary had to say good-bye to 13 residents who've joined our pride on the other side.

Equipment

- A new rescue vehicle was purchased to aid in cross country rescues.
- A large walk-in freezer was purchased to accommodate our growing population, replacing an old refurbished freezer.
- High-speed internet was brought to the property. This allows us to bring the sanctuary to our supporters more seamlessly and enables us to upgrade our security system.
- Transport crates were all upgraded and reinforced for big cat rescues and two new crates were constructed and built.
- UTVs for daily care and feeding of the cats were purchased.

Working for the Cats

- The intern house received some new windows and furnace for efficiency. Growing the intern program benefits the animals at the sanctuary and helps us inspire future animal advocates.
- The sanctuary added a new Communications Specialist to the staff to help provide support and bring the sanctuary to our supporters through photos, videos and social media.
- Animal Care staff fed 100,000 pounds of food last year.
- Animal Care Interns contributed almost 20,000 hours of work to support animal care and construction.
- We were awarded one AmeriCorps team of 9 people who volunteered 39 days or 2,693 total hours! They helped with habitat upgrades and the new Quarantine area, including 1,245 feet of fencing and flooring improvements!

Inspire advocates at every touch point

- The Wildcat Sanctuary attended the Big Cat Sanctuary Alliance Conference. Executive Director sat on the events, rescue and advocacy committees. The Wildcat Sanctuary also presented at the conference.
- A new website and brand video were created to share our mission and cats' stories with the world, providing an educational platform about the captive wildlife crisis.
- The Wildcat Sanctuary reached 2.9 million people through Facebook. We created two new Facebook Group pages that are growing rapidly, too. Fans have become advocates and support legislation, write letters and help educate about the captive wildlife crisis.
- The Wildcat Sanctuary Development volunteers contributed hours equal to four full-time employees.

Leo, lion

- On-site volunteer support included 27 Volunteer Construction Crew Days, Skilled Carpentry, Welding, and Tree Care Volunteers, 13 Garden Volunteers, Volunteer Veterinarians and Vet Techs, Healing Touch Volunteers, Photography, and others who helped with administrative tasks and enrichment creation.
- Off-site volunteer support includes our Volunteer Event Team that planned 2 major events and over a dozen outreach booths, as well as graphic design and marketing outreach support.
- Wow!!! This is incredible, isn't it? We couldn't do this without all of YOU!

A look ahead to 2020

2020 is a big construction year for our future Animal Care & Education Center.

The Animal Care and Education Center is the future of The Wildcat Sanctuary and will provide an important platform for our mission—to help more animals and educate more people.

With your support, this new multi-use building will serve our cats through all stages of their lives. It will also be a place to teach those who can help make a difference the realities of the captive wildlife crisis.

You can be a part of it at:

- Open habitats are being prepared for pending rescues.
- Plans for renovating two outdoor hybrid haven yards, if time permits.ww

Equipment

- A daily SUV is needed for staff/interns to drive for supply and food runs.
- A new plow truck will be needed to ensure we have road access and can clear the property at all times during the winter.
- New mowers are needed to maintain the habitats and grounds.
- Ongoing maintenance is always necessary; including tiger pool and drainage repairs in habitats. Any old fencing will be replaced.

Nikita, tiger

Building for our Future

- A 2nd intern/staff house or land is being researched in order to expand daily resources for our growing organization.
- Bringing the sanctuary to our supporters through:
 - More photos, live posts and videos through more social media channels
 - Growing the media and communications internship
- Developing our strategic plan for the next 3, 5 and 10 years.
- Including Development and Finance staff/resources
- Expanding leadership
- Continuing Education for all staff
- How we impact the Captive Wildlife Crisis nationally and internationally
- We look forward to another successful year for the cats - we can't do it without you!

Meet Cinders & Ashes

Cinders and Ashes, bengals

You can imagine how sad I am when I receive another email or phone call from a heartbroken Bengal cat owner at wits end. The story's always the same.

After several vet visits, and even behavior modification plans, owners can't curb the litter issues and feel helpless about what to do.

These sisters are sweet and have been through 2 homes already, but their litter box habits have been getting even worse.

We welcome them to their forever home and will continue to educate why hybrid Bengal Cats often end up with no where to go.
